If your business fails or is sued, how can you protect the valuable assets?

The goal of a business owners should be to title as few valuable assets as possible to their operating company. Why needlessly lose valuable assets if their business fails or is sued? It's smarter to title these more valuable assets to another entity to isolate them from the business' creditors. These assets owned through another entity can then be leased or licensed to the operating company.

Think about how this relates to what is going on today. Unfortunately, many businesses are unable to operate and generate revenue. However, just because some companies may go out of business, they shouldn't necessarily lose all of their valuable assets.
