How does Estate Planning fit in with Asset Protection planning?

The two objectives are closely connected. You can work a lifetime to accumulate your wealth and lose it all to your creditors after you die. Or you can lose it to your children's creditors or ex-spouses. Children do lose their parents' hard-earned money. Without careful planning you can also lose a fortune in estate taxes. So you must also think about how you can best protect your assets after you pass on. We want our clients to look ahead. How can they shield their wealth from creditors and wasteful heirs after they're gone? On the other hand, you may be a beneficiary of a large inheritance. You must then ask yourself similar questions. How should you safeguard your inheritance against your financial problems? What would happen to your inheritance if you divorce? How can you protect your inheritance once you're ready to pass it on to your heirs?
