ASSET PROTECTION ATTORNEYS

Are there other protective options besides the Limited Partnership, International Trust or LLC?

As with any type asset, there are multiple protective options. For instance, a few states with tenancy-by-the-entirety laws protect spousal co-owned investments from creditor claims against one spouse. Florida is one such state. But it's important that every asset (bank accounts, portfolio, etc.) be properly titled to gain this protection. Some spouses prefer to title their investments to the less vulnerable spouse. We think that this is poor planning for the same reason that titling the home and other real estate to one spouse is less than optimum. It creates estate planning difficulties and does not always safeguard the assets titled to that one spouse. A few of our clients have transferred their assets to irrevocable domestic trusts.
