ASSET PROTECTION ATTORNEYS

How can a cohabitating couple avoid legal claims and property disputes?

This is a growing legal concern because many more couples now live together without marrying. Some want to test their relationship. Older folks may live together because marriage would disqualify them from social security or pensions. Others want to avoid responsibility for the care of an ill partner or the many other legal and financial complications that arise from marriage. These concerns become particularly acute when one party has substantially more wealth.
