Isn't it true that an insurer may refuse coverage on a particular claim and if so, how often does this happen?

It happens all the time. People who believe that they are insured against a certain claim are always surprised when their insurance company points out their ominous fine print exclusion. For example, one client was sued for $500,000 resulting from his teenage daughter's car accident. He assumed that his auto insurance policy would cover the accident until his insurance agent notified him that his policy didn't cover his daughter because she had moved out of his house to attend college. He paid over $150,000 to settle. You too have endless ways to get into trouble, and your insurance won't always come to your rescue. We repeat: Buy insurance but don't rely upon it.
